Following last year's successful collaboration, London Underground's Platform for Art programme is delighted to be working again with the Royal Academy Schools.

Line-Up is a showcase of five talented artists – Maisie Kendall, Liane Lang, Robert Rush, Sinta Tantra and Amy Woolley – who graduate from the Royal Academy Schools this summer. The exhibition is an opportunity for the artists to show their work in a unique public environment and is testament to Platform for Art's commitment to working with artists in the early stages of their career. It coincides with the Royal Academy Schools final show in June.

The Royal Academy Schools formed the foundation of the Royal Academy of Arts in 1768 and is the oldest art school in the country. Renowned throughout the world as a centre of excellence, its past students include JMW Turner, William Blake and, more recently, John Hoyland and Anthony Caro. Over three years of postgraduate study, students learn about a range of contemporary ideas and approaches, enabling them to develop their individual practice.

Comments

I have been in London now from Poland for six weeks and I think it is the wonderfull that you are having the art in the tube stations from the students are very good. I think best of the pink one by Virgin, the bend with the walls and it is much fun at the end of my days to walk past on my way to home.
